What do you like most about these tools?

I can take video shots, tag and create smart collections.

speed, organization

Easily accesible from anywhere.

Twitter archives all of my favorites so I can review them. But it's not me generating the list. Just favorites of other people's links. Browser is handy, especially in chrome because it follows me everywhere. Pinterest is fine, but it's too much baking and stuff. I need one for design only.

Most of the time, they are integrated across all my devices. So no matter where I save it, I have access to it from every device (browser,fb,etc). I still like bookmarks in my browser quite a bit. Easy to save and organize content I want to read for later. I have tons of stuff like that I need to read later or research. I like that I can setup folders for things, and then when I bookmark it, I select the folder and Im done. For instance I have folder for Web development, Information, Thought Leaders, etc. Whenever I find things I can easily save to those folders.

It's immediately available in my browser window.

It gives me a way to save links I want to go back to.

They keep my news links organized and accessible from all my devices. I can stop reading in one place and pick it up in another.

What do you like least about these tools?

It doesn't always remember where I was at and something I have to dismiss the link on more than one device.

none allow for bulk edits

Setting it up. Building folders to save links.

It's not easy to save from any article, post, etc. Every article or piece of content has different ways to share, email, embed, etc. Would be nice if they were uniform everywhere. Management of bookmarks is not the easiest. You have to click in the settings and manage everything, but that is expected to setup a framework for quick and easy saving.

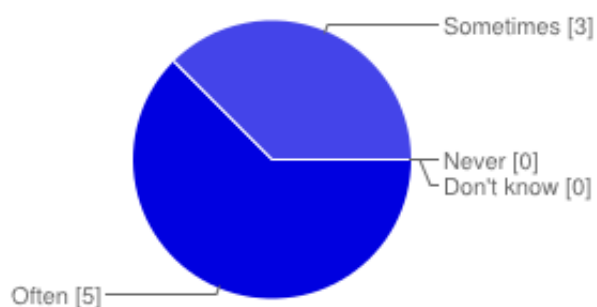

Pinterest is filled with stuff I don't care about. Twitter isn't my content all the time I'm favoriting. Browser gets too messy. Hard to keep track of.

Trying to best organize it.

Can't think of any cons for Ember.

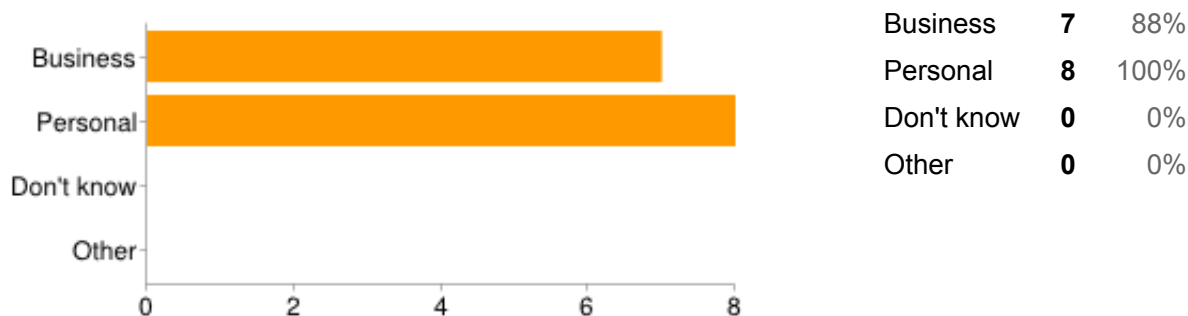

I often forget what I've bookmarked.

Evernote	3	38%
Desktop applications	2	25%
Microsoft Word	0	0%
Smart phone app	4	50%
None	1	13%
Other	3	38%

What do you like most about these tools?

Accessibility and ease of use. it second nature.

having a lot of data with me at any given moment

They are free form and allow me to share my notes with all my devices.

Accesible from device that goes with mw just about anywhere.

Simplenote syncs with my phone easily and it has simple interface that I like. We just started using readme.io at work and it's been a game-changer for keeping track of all of our documentation.

Ease of access and super quick to do. I like to jot down notes on my iphone notes app, and on my mac dashboard with sticky notes. Those are quick and I can usually swipe and start typing. I also like that gdocs is searchable and accessible on all devices.

Evernote allows me to write and store everywhere. Phone, tablet, etc. On my phone, I use the notes app for grocery lists. It's handy.

What do you like least about these tools?

Evernote is just notes. I can't figure out how to keep track of photos. I'm also not sure if I can group content together? The notes app on my phone is just a notes app. Nothing more.

I like to use my handwriting vs typing. Actually writing helps to remember easily.

With notes on my phone, I have to open it up as an app. I wish I could just swipe to the left and start typing; sort of like the old search navigation that used to be there.

workflow still cumbersome at times and not completely intuitive across all platforms...seems like it could be easier still.

If pen and paper, finding the pen or paper.

Saving and sharing with others is not always as simple as they make it seem. Why can't everything just function like Google Docs?

Wish there was a more robust version control w/ readme.io
